ABOUT IGPP, FUDAN UNIVERSITY

复旦大学全球公共政策研究院

The Fudan Institute for Global Public Policy (IGPP) highlights Fudan University's new initiative to innovate research and education in social sciences and particularly in public policy. In partnership with the LSE-Fudan Research Centre for Global Public Policy, the institute aims to advance research on global public policy, to produce world-class research outputs, and to generate global academic and social impacts, in response to unprecedented global policy and governance challenges that call for designed and coordinated human actions.

ABOUT DGPP

项目介绍

The English-instructed PhD in Global Public Policy (DGPP) is a four-year, full-time program that enrolls both international and Chinese students. Students will be awarded the Ph.D. degree of Management Science in Public Policy from Fudan University upon completing all the graduation requirements.

The program integrates high-quality education and research resources of Fudan and its global partners in multiple disciplines, affords rigorous theoretical and methodological training, and exposes students to global and Chinese perspectives. It aims to train future generations of scholars and analysts of local, national, regional and global policy and governance.

PROGRAM HIGHLIGHTS

项目特色

>>> Interdisciplinary training

DGPP emphasizes interdisciplinary training in public management, political science, public health, economics, environment and other disciplines.

>>> Pragmatic focus

DGPP focuses on major challenges of global social development, environment, health, science and technology governance, as well as public responses.

>>> Precise guidance

Students are expected to build up an impressive record of research and publication under the supervision of outstanding scholars.

>>> Ample opportunities

The institute has partnership relations with top universities and academic institutions, so that students will have ample exchange opportunities.
